Loved the first (2007) edition so much that I drove an hour to a tiny visitor's center to see the author's presentation. Recently, while researching a hike online, I happened to discover that there's a new revised expanded 2nd edition (2015). Didn't hesitate to order it. Am keeping the older one, too. Both books are so good that even if you didn't actually do the hikes, it would be a pleasure just to read them. The author has a great sense of humor, writes well, provides historical information with plenty of interesting details. There's also a chapter on hike preparation safety. The Road To Ruins is calling my name. I can hardly wait to get out there again.1 of 1 people found the following review helpful. An amazing hiking book!By Jennifer LeonA coworker lent me his 2007 copy of this book and it has become my go to for hiking ideas. My first adventure was Doodletown and the directions given were perfect. I read aloud to my boyfriend all the interesting historical tidbits Steinberg includes. The second hike we took using this book as our guide was The Pergola. It was perfect and my boyfriend proposed on that hike. So, not only is it a fun, informative hiking guide, it holds a special place in my heart. I have purchased the new revised 2015 edition to keep for myself and can't wait to try some more hikes. I highly recommend this book.

In this easy to use, informative, and occasionally eccentric guidebook, David A. Steinberg blazes the trail to more than twenty-five unusual landmarks and hard-to-find destinations that are mostly within a two-hour drive of New York City. Suitable for the experienced hiker or camping adventurer as well as anyone who has the desire to explore Hiking the Road to Ruins includes many new ruins and historic sites to see: remnants of the two Worlds Fairs in Queens, mysterious stone chambers scattered about northern Westchester County, winter adventuring in Harriman, and quarries that contain amazing artifacts.

About the Author DAVID A. STEINBERG is a life-long resident of the New York City area and has been a paid leader of hikes for fifteen years.
