A friend reminded me of the book, and I enjoyed re-reading the whole thing, in one sitting. So many stories of life in the New Orleans I want to remember. Still lots of fun. Errol has a grasp of the city that is possibly surpassed only by his wife.0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. Great taste of homeBy Katherine L Grams McGovernI first bought this book in the early 1990s, loaned it to someone and never got it back, yet twenty years later I constantly find situations that remind me of Mr. LaBorde's stories. I recently had the pleasure of finally meeting him, which inspired me to rebuy this book. I highly recommend it for anyone who wants a great taste of home.0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. Knowing New OrleansBy A CustomerThis collection of essays provides a good slice of life for those who crave New Orleans.

These witty essays reveal why locals find it so hard to leave--and why visitors always come back.

From the Back CoverErrol Laborde describes himself as a committed urban dweller whose beat to date has been his native city of New Orleans. He is the publisher and editor of Louisiana Life magazine and a columnist for City Business. His "Streetcar" column, which began running weekly in Gambit in 1982, is now found monthly in New Orleans Magazine, where he also serves as associate publisher and editor. Producer and panelist for the television program Informed Sources, Laborde has taught political science at local universities and founded several community projects, including the Tennessee Williams/New Orleans Literary Festival. He also gives talks on state and local politics, as well as on the history of Mardi Gras.About the AuthorErrol Laborde, editor and publisher of Louisiana Life magazine, has won more than twenty-five New Orleans Press Club Awards for outstanding journalism since 1972.
