Tim O'Brien : Tony Baxter: First of the Second Generation of Walt Disney Imagineers (Legends Legacies Series) before purchasing it in order to gauge whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised Tony Baxter: First of the Second Generation of Walt Disney Imagineers (Legends Legacies Series):

You are hearing an employee tell a workplace story, yet Tony never did a day of "work", it was always a "labor of love" fueled by his passion for the essence of Disney and "pushing the envelope". As with love, comes occasional pain and ecstasy and he gets into that. To make those "magic" breakthroughs you have to first face forces that resist you and he was relentless. To that extent, hearing him tell the WED story from his unique perspective is something even his coworkers (like me) will enjoy as he relates the highs, the lows, the who's and the why's as only he can. Recommend, and if I know Tony, he'll have more to say :-)

Pretty short for a more pricey Disney biography vs. the typical Theme Park Press ones that are put out pretty frequently. As a long time Disney theme park history buff, not much new here. I was expecting more in depth stories about the creation of his projects and the ones that never came to be. I would recommend this book for those not that familiar with Mr. Baxter's work, everyone else, I would honestly skip it. I've already read all the same Big Thunder and Star Tours stories. I wanted more in depth info on his input on Disneyland Paris, which is very high level in this book. There are several pictures with his mentor I don't really remember reading much about.

Tony Baxter joined Walt Disney Imagineering when he was 22 years old and is among the first of a second generation of Disney creatives who fashioned the magic found today in Disney parks worldwide. He would stay with the company for nearly fifty year and today serves as a mentor and consultant to the new, younger generation of Imagineers. . Tony is credited for helping create such Disney attraction icons as Star Tours, Big Thunder Mountain Railroad, Splash Mountain, and the Indiana Jones Adventure. He has been lauded for his creative leadership at Disneyland Paris Resort, is a Disney Legend and has a personalized window on Main Street, U.S.A. in Disneyland Park, considered by many to be one of the highest honors a Disney employee can achieve. From ice cream scooper in 1965 to Senior Vice President of Creative Development in 2013, this is his story.
